In 1803 the people of Virginia elect a Governor, a Lieutenant-Governor, an Attorney-General, one half of the membership of the State Senate, and a new House of Delegates. And the General Assembly in turn elects a number of State officers and a senator in the United States Congress to succeed Sepator Hunton, who is ment the unexpired term of Mr. BARBOUR,

Theoretically it ought to be easy perhaps for forty-four States each to have its own banking laws and its own State currency and to get that currency to pass everywhere, but practically the voters will recollect that up to 1862 or thereabouts no national paper currency was ever in circulation all over the Union from Maine to Louisiana
